My Dear Frank:

The monotony of the journey from Boston to New York, yesterday, was much relieved by the social intercourse I had with Mr. Rogers, of Worcester, a nephew of Dr. Rogers, who now keeps a Water Cure establishment in Florida. I learned from him that he was of Quaker stock; that his wife was a daughter of my deceased Quaker friend Edward Earle; that he had three children, whose photographs he had with him; that he was an officer in Col. Higginson's colored regiment in South Carolina; and that, from a boy of ten years old, he had been used to attending anti-slavery meetings, having been present at the annual meeting of the American A. S. Society in the Broadway Tabernacle in this city, when Isaiab Rynders and his ruffian gang attempted to control the proceedings - Rynders springing to my side while I was speaking, and threatening to knock me or any other man down who should undertake to disparage the U. S. Constitution, and who was so successfully ridiculed by Frederick Douglass and Samuel R. Ward. Mr. Rogers related various reminiscences and anecdotes in connection with his residence in South Carolina and the colored regiments. Like George, he was fortunate in not receiving a wound or injuring his health.

Notwithstanding an entire week of raining and foggy weather, the ride from New Haven to New York was annoyingly dusty, particularly as we were in the last car. We arrived exactly on time - a quarter before 6. In spite of my prohibition, Wendell was on hand to escort me to this house, where I found Harry, Fanny, and the children waiting to give me a hearty greeting. After supper Wendell went on his way to Orange. Helen showed me with much satisfaction some daisies that she had very creditably painted for me, and put into a neat little frame, which I shall take with me to Rockledge.

I was surprised to learn from Harry, that the trip to Europe (on account of his business affairs) would have to be deferred till June; and he seriously proposes that I should accompany Fanny and the children to the English Lakes, (leaving on the 16th inst.) and there remain until he can join us! Of course, it is utterly out of the question. I think it is somewhat doubtful whether they go at all.

This evening Fanny is to have her great musical party. Wendell, unfortunately, cannot be with us.
He has taken Harold and Oswald along with him to Orange, to remain till to-morrow.

I trust you had a pleasant evening at William's, with Miss Willard.

To-day the weather is warm and sultry.

I shall return home somewhat sooner than I expected.

Your loving Father
